Supermodel, super mom — is she superhuman? Not really, says Doutzen Kroes, Victoria's Secret Angel — she just seems that way.

"Maybe it has to do with the fact that I became a mom — because you feel like a mom, you don't (always) feel like a bombshell." She could have fooled us.

Kroes was glowing and relaxed in the high-gloss Victoria's Secret store in Toronto's Eaton Centre last week. The 28-year-old Dutch model was in Canada promoting the lingerie label's swimwear and intimates collection (famous for adding two cup sizes), as part of the company's Bombshell Summer Tour. Beautyies are travelling across the U.S. and Canada in May and June to give signings and pass on tips to fans.

In person, Kroes looks like she could mail a nation in the morning (she's a runner and was a speed skater prior to modeling) and turn heads at a VIP party later that night.

But there's definitely days when even a supermodel doesn't feel sexy, she says. Those times, she'll flip a switch in her mind to turn into her glowing persona — it helps to play dress-up, too.

"I like to go home and put on makeup and put on my heels," she says. "Especially because I just had a baby... when you have the time to go out, it's fun. I really take my time and I enjoy it."

Kroes gave birth to son Pylton in January and headed back to work just eight weeks later — for a beach photo shoot, no less. She credits her firm to intense workouts like running and jump rope, and practicing pilates and yoga during her pregnancy. Kroes also breastfeeds (which can burn up to 500 calories per day) and says she's allowed herself to take the time to get her body back into shape.

With a home in New York, but work that takes her all over the world, Kroes admits she needs a break now and again. "When I'm working a lot, I make sure I have a break for three days, where I just sleep when my baby sleeps. I'm just home and I don't do anything," says Kroes. "You need to recharge your battery — otherwise I'm losing myself."
